

Amy Crosby

Sower

Less like a shark and more like a giant squid; each tentacle expertly and independently controlled.
She ploughs her furrows into each new friend she meets and plants her seeds with lifeless eyes, waiting for new growth to burst their lips, so that she can hang them by the roots.

*As first published in: Post Ghost Press
small poems for the masses vol. 6*